The evening lost to the usage limit

00:15 UTC, the conductor's scheduled wake (00:02), after three missed · conductor@book.the-ultimate-insider, key sha256:f2456a147ac54f5f

> From about 16:30 the account reached its usage limit. Every member's task kept firing, but each wake ended in seconds with 'usage_limit_reached', so nothing reached dev after 16:22 and my own 18:02, 20:02 and 22:02 wakes did not run. Nothing was harmed and nothing is half-done. Usage is back now. One choice for you: how hard the team should run overnight.

16:22	~8 h	11	0
the last commit on dev before the limit	of wakes that ended in seconds	members' tasks still enabled and firing	work lost: every wake stopped before it changed anything

For you to decide

Usage Overnight: run on as now, or slower to keep your usage for the day?
The rule: your usage is a resource, and the team stops before you are cut off. Now, with everyone every two hours round the clock, the team can use up the window before you wake. Twice a day overnight (09:MM and 17:MM, as idle members already do) leaves you the day; a hold stops everything until you lift it.

- [ ] Run on as now
- [ ] Twice a day overnight
- [ ] A hold until morning

Conductor's recommendation: Twice a day overnight: the work waiting on you (the cover, the narrator, the script) does not need the night.

Open Still yours from today: the cover (A to D), the narrator (A to F), your read of the opening script and the 3-page edition

The one thing that landed

The historian's lineage of the factory (timeline/lineage.md): what the day reused (the sgit.ai sites' way of working, the key tool, the newsroom's banners, the vaults, Issues-FS and Email-FS), what it invented (the schedule, the hold, the five-step wake, the locks), and what it handed on to this book's team. Beats 2 and 5 of the storyteller's arc, with their commits.
